According to the attaches of the Grand Jury, a number of papers considered essential to the work of the Grand Jury have not been furnished in answer to subpoenas issued to officials holding them. In the instance of the elected official in question, members of the jury were told that a defiant answer was made to the subpoens server presenting the demand.

Arrangements were being made to-day, it was said, to give the persons who have ignored subpoenas a chance to appear before the jury Monday and Tuesday and explain their conduct. If the explanation was not satisfactory to the jury, it was stated. the offending officials would be taken before Justice Weeks, who impanelled the jury, for a public explanation.

Morals and Principles.

By DR. BERTHOLD A. BAER.

"Your success in business depends on what others think or say of your establishment or your methods."
"The successful man knows that honesty of purose and honest goods contribute more to success than 'good luck.' "Add to these hard work, efficient service, character, strength and integrity and you have the man who is happy because he is chosen to serve." It was my good fortune to be present at one of the regular meetings of the employees of The Funeral Church, Campbell Building, Broadway at 66th Street, which was presided over by Frank E. Campbell, its founder-proprietor. That I was surprised at what Mr. Campbell said to his associates expresses my feeling only mildly.

Until now I had thought that "undertakers" were something uncanny, something "pleasedon'ttouchme.

I, as well as my friends, pictured an "undertaker" as a man with a sad face, wearing a long, black "Prince Albert Coat," with trousers three inches too long and a black tie two inches too wide. While here was an aggregation of men, acting like regular human beings, dressing like real men and talking about business morals and business principles. 'Ever attended one of our evening funeral services?" asked Mr. Campbell.

I had not. Then come around to-night. You will find the building magnificently lighted by 'standards' of my own design. You will find every employee who is any way has anything to do with the funeral service attired in full dress.

'You will hear the strains of our electric pipe organ and the rich blending voices of our quartette. Won't

I did come and I heard and saw everything Mr. Campbell said.

I also heard what the people said who attended the beautiful service, and looking over the almost in-describably beautiful institution I realized that all of this could have been built up only by giving real service.
